GLADSTONE'S FATAL BLUNDER. White people in South Africa are Gladstone in commuting to penal servitude for life the death sentence passed upon a Kaffir at Umtali for eriminally assaulting a white woman. After reviewing the evidence, Gladstone was in doubt that the crime was actually cominitted, and was induenced in this opinion by the statement of the trial judge that he would have preferred a verdict of assault with intent. In such case, the intent would have been suffletent to have justified the death sentence; certainly, there is no doubt that the assault was attempted, and Gladstone's effort to defend his course by pleading that the police were at fault because they did not arrest the Kaffir when they saw him going about in a state of advanced intextention the evening before he committed his crime, in no sense excuses him for his abuse of executive elemency. Such, at least, is the opinion of the white people in his course. The Johannesburg correspondent of the over-seas edition of The Daily Mail reports that public menin South Africa hold that if Gladstone cannot make a satisfactory explanation
